Yes or No.

You ask to-night my daughter's hand, As you'd request a toy-Do you know the weight of your demand

On a mother's heart, my boy?
You say you love her wildly; we'l,
Will it last 'till the end of time
Or will the ring of the wedding bell
Resound its dying chime? a heart you crave is a hely thing,

So tender, trusting true; Can you to her devotion bring As warm as her's to you? Will you love her through the changing years As tenderly as now, When ills shall pale, or sorrow's tears Becloud her sunny brow?

When age shall bow her graceful form, And bleach her jetty hair, Will you protect her through each storm And shelter her from care?

When time shall dim her sparkling eye And winter furrows show, Will your love be the last to die? If not, I answer, No. Remember that her future life

Would every day be yours; To one that she adores, liss no existence of her own Apart from him she loves; She lives honceforth for him alone, And in his orbit moves. She molds her wishes to his will.

Her ways to his desires; He leads her by love's willing web
Through life's refining fires;
She walks with him through thorny fields,
And o'er life's rugged road; He is her idol and ideal,

Her guide and household god. So, if your love will live and burn, And bless her future years; If you will give her in return The trust that life endears; If you will guide her destiny, And shield her from distress,

Will always live, adoring her,
